The Story Of Our Canals

Many of our canals were built at the height of the industrial revolution. Thanks to the hard work of our dedicated heritage team, stepping foot onto one of our towpaths is like stepping into a living museum where you can touch all of the exhibits. But even more incredible than the structures dotted along the canals are the stories of the people who worked the boats during the glorious Canal Age.

The canal network of the United Kingdom played a vital role in the Industrial Revolution. The canals permitted the creation of wealth, by industry, that led to the British Empire in the Victorian Era. The UK was the first country to develop a nationwide canal network, which expanded to nearly 4,000 miles in length. The canals allowed raw materials to be transported to a place of manufacture, and finished goods to be transported to consumers, more quickly and cheaply than via a land based route.
